

Executive Benefits Trends

2009 industry analysis¹ reveals a decade of drastic development in nonqualified plans with:

- Since 1975 there have been 191,625 plans sponsored that cover 1,582,484 executives
- Average number of participants per plan is 15
- There are an average 8 participants per plan when a plan has less than 100 participants
- There is only 1 participant in 24.6% of all new plans
- 85% of companies use some nonqualified Deferred Compensation Plan; 82% in Financial Institutions
- 90% of plans provide deferral of base salary
- 97% allow all or part of their short term incentives
- 62% of nonqualified plan participants were lower/middle management ($150,000 or less per year)
- 67% of companies have a Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan (SERP)
- 48% of companies allow Director deferrals
- 71% of nonqualified plans are informally funded
- 61% of informally funded plans use Corporate Owned Life Insurance (COLI)
- 45% of informally funded plans use Mutual Funds
- 80% of companies use a Rabbi Trust
- 61% provide financial planning as an executive benefit

There are several major factors that contribute to the significant proliferation of such participant directed retirement plans.

1. The transition from defined benefit to defined contribution type plans, is largely a result of withdrawal of government support of company provided pension plans.
2. Continued IRS limitations on contributions into and benefits receivable from qualified retirement plans by Highly Compensated Employees.

This planning arena is opening up significantly, not only in number of smaller and middle-sized companies, but for the middle tier executives as well. The basic reality is the quality of a company's compensation and benefits is the key to attracting and retain the highest quality employees and executives. In turn, these employees are the key to achieving the company's strategic goals.
